Concept of the Week

ODD Lot Theory

The odd lot theory uses the sale of odd lots – small blocks of stocks held by individual investors – as an indicator of when to buy into a stock. Investors following the odd lot theory buy in when small investors sell out. The main assumption is those small investors are usually wrong.

The odd lot theory is a contrarian strategy based on a very simple form of technical analysis – measuring odd lot sales. How successful an investor or trader following the theory depends heavily on whether he checks the fundamentals of companies that the theory points toward or simply buys blindly.

Small investors aren't going to be right or wrong all the time, and so it's important to distinguish odd lot sales that are occurring from a low-risk tolerance from odd lot sales that are due to bigger problems. Individual investors are more mobile than the big funds and thus can react to severe news faster, so odd lot sales can actually be a precursor to a wider sell-off in a failing stock instead of just a mistake on the part of small-time investors.

Did You Know?

It is not common knowledge but Google was originally named BackRub. Larry Page and Sergey Brin renamed their company 'Google' in 1997. Google is actually a play on the word 'googol' – a mathematical term for the number represented by 1 followed by 100 zeros.

Facebook is primarily blue in colour because its owner and chief, Mark Zuckerberg suffers from red-green colour blindness. Blue is the only color he sees best. "Blue is the richest colour for me," he once said.

Believe it or not, the Volkswagen Group owns some of the world's biggest auto brands. The groups sell passenger cars under these brands namely - Audi, Bentley, Bugatti, Lamborghini, Porsche, SEAT, and Skoda. It also sells motorcycles under the Ducati brand.

For a long time, Warner Music held the copyrights to "Happy Birthday". This meant that the company could collect royalties from anyone who ever sang it. However, a couple of years ago, Warner Music paid $14 million to settle a 'Happy Birthday' copyright lawsuit and put the song in public domain.
